

Dear Ian Paluck,

Your LECTURE presentation "Peter Pan: The Boy Who Tried to Grow Up" has been accepted into the Undergraduate Research and Innovation Conference.

The presentations will take place on Saturday March 28 in the International Building, and a more detailed schedule with rooms and times will be sent out in early March.

We know last-minute issues come up, but we'd like to have a pretty firm program in place by early March – so if you have changed your mind and you cannot present, please do everything you can to notify us of this decision by March 1st. If you have class or work scheduling conflicts, let us know – we always try to work with student schedules to make it possible for you to present.

All parts of the conference are free to presenters, their faculty supervisors, as well as any friends or family you may wish to invite. This will include the Friday March 27 poster exhibit in the Mountain Room, as well as the Saturday March 28 lectures, events, and meals. While we know that you may have classes and work, you are encouraged to spend as much of the event as possible talking with students and faculty about your research - and walking around to see the other research, too; your conference experience is about far more than just sharing your own work.

The current version of your presentation is available here:

<https://digitalcommons.library.tru.ca/cgi/preview.cgi?article=1535&context=urc>

We will be making very minor copy-edits to abstracts as we work on making them live on the conference website, just to ensure consistency in basic formatting and grammar. If there are significant revisions that you wish to make, please send me an email with your changes and I'll update the record.

Congratulations, and we look forward to seeing your work!
On behalf of the 2020 Conference committee,

Elizabeth Rennie
erennie@tru.ca